

Water scarcity conditions in the Colorado River Basin

Actions:

- Reductions are being applied to water users in both countries, according to the agreements established in the International Boundary and Water Commission (IBWC).
- Resources are being applied in the implementation of projects for water conservation in both countries, mainly in the United States, that benefit the storage of water in the system and avoid greater cuts in the future.
- Mexico is also moving forward in the conservation projects with resources provided by Minute 323 of the IBWC.
- A communication strategy is being instrumented on basin conditions and their implications for both countries (meeting with different actors involved, distribution of newsletters, publishing information on the internet, among others).
